

Pop-up wedding event promises stress-free nuptials for $5K

2/21/2016

Can you get a magazine-worthy wedding for $5,000? Maybe... but there's a catch (of course).

Pop-up wedding company PopBliss is holding its "first ever" luxury wedding in New York City at the end of March. The event promises a luxury wedding and "lust-worthy Instagram-worthy photos to remember the day forever."

More: SwanLuv backs out on promise to provide free money for engaged couples

If you're one of the 10 lucky couples selected, you'll have to pay $5,000 but you and your guests will get a welcome party, "bliss" brunch, glam suite and a pop-up wedding. The wedding will also be live-streamed to an additional 300 guests.

"In true pop-up style, the location, vendors, décor, food and all other details are wonderful, whimsical and unique — surprising the couples with the best wedding money can buy without the hefty price tag," the company said in a statement.

More: Sniff your way to a love connection with this weird new dating service

Translated, this means you'll get a destination wedding for next-to-no money, but you won't get any say in the planning. This sounds like a dream to me because I hate planning things, but it might be anxiety-inducing to others who like having a say over everything.

The PopBliss team is hoping that this type of event — planned in conjunction with wedding expert Racquel Kristi — will become "the next big thing in bridal." Interested? Sign up on the PopBliss website. But, act fast: The pop-up nuptials are planned for March 30 and 31, 2016.